Dogs growl, bark and lunge because it results in an outcome they want: Driving scary dogs or people away.

Sounds simple, but in the dog training community this is a controversial view of how aggression works. Most experts teach that aggression is "classical" stimulus-response behavior. In other words, they say that it's instinct or genes rather than experience that makes a dog turn out bad.

Join Kellie Snider, MS and Jesús Rosales-Ruiz, PhD at the SPCA of Texas Lone Star Campus on August 16th and 17th for an innovating seminar on Constructional Aggression Treatment (C.A.T. for Dogs).
